Some of the Jewish Members of Parliament who served Britain during the First World War served in the Trenches; some held Cabinet Posts while others busied themselves at home with their usual pursuits, during very unusual times. The war however, touched all their lives.

These stories include those whose commitment to Jewish life was important to them, some who hid their Jewishness. Others held high offices of state, or gave up sons as the ultimate sacrifice for their country and there is even one story of an MP who turned traitor and became a spy.
